Twelve-Story Trade Claims Madison Avenue Apartments

Trade must be served, even though it lessens the housing accommodations of the city. The eight-story structure at the northwest corner of Madison Avenue and Twenty-eighth Street, one of the last remaining apartment houses of the better type erected many years ago in that section, is to be made over for the use of the silk industry, which has taken possession of lower Madison Avenue. The building will be altered into showrooms by James M. Reynold, president of the McReynold Realty Company, who bought the old structure yesterday from the 80 Madison Avenue Corporation through Ames & Co. and the Cruikshank Company.
